In this UITableView there are two cells. So, when the app loads, the user can tap the first cell (say as a start) and move to the next view controller. The problem I am facing is that I have a class that has UIViewController as one of its properties and I want to use this UIViewController to display the tableView. Is there a way to programmatically open it in another tab. I don't want to use segues. I am basically creating a tableView inside of a class. The class can open another viewController or simply open the view. All is fine when the user goes back to the previous tab. EDIT A solution that helped me was the following. UITableViewController *viewController = [self.storyboard instantiateViewControllerWithIdentifier:@"MainStoryboardViewController"]; viewController.view.frame = CGRectMake(0, 0, 320, 400); UINavigationController *navController = [[UINavigationController alloc] initWithRootViewController:viewController]; My UITableViewController has a view (which is the main view in the app) which has to be displayed in the main window (it is from the storyboard). Then, I created a new class that inherits UITableViewController (and also implemented initWithCoder: to recreate a new UITableViewController and in this new view controller, I changed the frame of the UIView in order to change the tableView frame. This is the complete code for the new class. #import "ViewController.h" @interface ViewController () @end @implementation ViewController @sy 3da54e8ca3
