Until this thread, I was not aware that you can use the Dolphin emulator on a Raspberry Pi. Jack and Jill I come from South Louisiana. My mom always told me that if you do anything by yourself, it's like being all by yourself. My sister went to a Rachmaninov concert by herself and when she got home, she was so happy. She was thinking, "I'm so glad I went by myself. It was really nice." If you do something by yourself, it's like being all alone. It's like being by yourself. There was an episode of "Friends" where they were at the airport and Rachel was sad that she was alone in New York by herself and then she met two guys and Ross and Joey came to meet her. I think that just had a really great feeling for her, because she wanted to enjoy the moment and the freedom that she was in New York and she did. I'm always thinking about how I can do something by myself. I'm not one of those people. If I'm alone, I feel like I am all alone. If I do something, it's like everyone else is with me. It's like the same thing my mom always says. So the title of my record is "I'm All Alone." Just yesterday I was thinking about that because I'm kind of 648931e174

Dolphin emulator (Wii, GameCube, DS) for Windows!Q: How to make multiple aggregated partial sums? I have a list of consecutive measured values $X = \{x_n; n = 1, 2, \dots, N\}$. I want to compute the aggregated value X_{N-k+1} which is x_{N+1} for $k=0$, the sum of the values so far X_1 to x_{N-k+1} for $k = 1, \dots, N-1$ and the value of the last sum $X_N = x_{N+1}$. The most straightforward way seems to compute the sums and then add the values up to x_{N+1} . But this takes quite some time (about 6 seconds on my machine). There are many other approaches on the internet but they seem not to be suitable for my situation. $x_1 = x[[1]]$ For $n = 2, n$
