After making sure that the preview image has no glare or reflections, it's time to add a layer of color to the image. It's a lot easier to add a color layer to an image that doesn't have any gloss, so keep that in mind when choosing the color. First, select the background color. Click on the Hue/Saturation tool, which can be found in the layers toolbox. Drag the layer of color down to the color palette, which will be looking something like the image below. Hue/Saturation is a wonderful tool that can do a lot of different things. Next, drag the Hue sliders and the Saturation slider up until the color palette looks something like the image below. If your photo is looking like a faded version of the color you are attempting to use, make sure that the Opacity slider is set to something less than 100%. You can create a color swatch in a similar way. First, make sure that the image has no color layer on it. Click on the ellipsis at the bottom of the layers toolbox, and then click on Layer → New Adjustment Layer → Color. A color swatch will pop up in the toolbox. Click on it, and then use the Hue sliders and the Saturation slider to mix the color in. Go back to the layers toolbox and drag the color layer down into the colors palette. Click on the eyedropper icon, which will appear when the eyedropper tool is active. Start clicking on areas of the image that you would like to have the new color added. After a while, the color should start to look like the image below. If the color changes after you've clicked it, make sure that the checked option for Lock Aspect Ratio is selected. Also make sure that the check mark is in the Use Alpha Channel box. There are a lot of different ways to add color to a photo, but they can be all very time consuming. If you want your photo to look more professional or if you just want to save time, you should use one of the several built-in color correction tools. Often times, when you're working on a landscape photo, you want to brighten up the skies. However, Photoshop isn't great at sharpening the image, so it can look a little muddy. Luckily, you can fix this easily. 05a79cecff

To use the clone stamp, first make sure the mode is set to Dissolve or Multiply. Then click and drag over the area where you want to copy from. With the selection active, the tool will display a checkerboard pattern. Click the pattern and drag the cursor over the area that will not copy from the previously selected area. When you release the mouse button, the chosen area will be retouched just like the rest of your image. 9. Retouch As the name implies, this tool is used to touch up photographs. It can also be used to repair bad skin or repair a blurred photo. Activate the Retouch tool by clicking the button under the Effects panel. With the tool active, click inside a small window to define the size of the area you want to retouch. Next, select the type of retouching you want to perform. Click the button under the Styles panel and choose an adjustment effect. For instance, you can change the color of a face or get rid of blemishes. You can also adjust the intensity of your retouching effects. 10. Content-Aware Scaling This tool allows you to resize an image to fit a specific size, or to fit within a defined area. Activate the tool by clicking the button under the Effects panel. Enter the size for the resized image, then click OK. Allowing the program to guess the correct fit is generally the easiest way to resize a photo. 11. Rotate This feature is useful when you want to rotate an object in an image. It also works very well for correcting images where objects have been rotated during their editing. Activate the tool by clicking the button under the Effects panel. Click the button under the Rotate panel to select the angle for the rotation. The object will be rotated in place. To avoid a skewed or distorted image, rotate the selection a little bit before moving it over the image. 12. Warp This tool, also known as distortion, is a great way to make objects look more three-dimensional. Activate the tool by clicking the button under the Effects panel. Click the button under the Warp panel to select the amount of distortion that you want to apply. Select the type of distortion you want to apply. You can choose from a variety of warp effects, including the Arch or Barrel distortion. After

When I create a UI object, I am using a dispatcher.BeginInvoke to run code on a different UI thread. public void OnMessageReceived(string message) { Dispatcher.BeginInvoke(() => { //do some other task }, DispatcherPriority.Normal, null); } The problem is that the Dispatcher.BeginInvoke creates a new object that is not reference to the original UI object. How to get a reference to that UI object? A: You're using Dispatcher.BeginInvoke correctly. You need to pass in a method that when invoked will return a delegate that will later invoke the actual code to run on the UI thread. public void OnMessageReceived(string message) { Dispatcher.BeginInvoke(delegate { //do some other task }); } And the method you are passing in to be invoked by the Dispatcher.BeginInvoke is just the code that is being invoked on the UI thread. As long as this is being invoked on the UI thread it will not care about the object the method is being invoked on. This code does not need any reference to the object.
