Some have ignited in homes, some in cars, others on the streets. Others have moved on to other wildland fire situations. Here is a list of the major fires that have occurred this year in Western Australia. The biggest and deadliest blaze in recorded history was at Esperance, situated just north of the state capital. Five homes in the Esperance suburb of Leeden were destroyed by a blaze that began in September. In January, a blaze in a gated community in the Goldfields region southwest of Perth destroyed seven homes and two tourist cottages. One person died in that fire, and police said they believed they knew the identity of the deceased, but no official identification was made at the time. Firefighters moved quickly to contain that blaze, but another fire in Kanowna started just hours later. In February, two separate blazes destroyed homes in the Perth Hills suburbs of Noranda and Kewdale. Months later, a fire at Mount Moora burned through bushland and the town was evacuated. Late in November, an active fire in the Bluejelly National Park of the Pilbara region caused widespread damage. The fire destroyed about 5.6 million hectares of the bushland region and burned about 11 houses in the town of Port Hedland. In December, a blaze in the state's north burned close to 100,000 hectares of land, putting the town of Wiluna under evacuation orders. A 19-year-old man was arrested over the Wiluna fire. Then in February, a blaze in the Hotham Shire burned through land near country town in Victoria's north. It destroyed the weatherboard home of a schoolteacher whose family had been preparing to move overseas and caused a temporary evacuation of the entire town.
