Even if you happen to need to download a file that is as large as a few hundred MB, it will be impossible to do so using a regular Internet connection. This is because that download process typically entails millions of tiny packets being sent to and from your computer, and these packets need to be stored and synchronized, and some of them will have to be sent out of your computer to other computers, so you better bet that it will take much time. But, as a matter of fact, you can and must use whatever connection method you prefer. By using a reliable internet connection with a sufficiently fast download speed, you can manage to transfer your setupconsumerc2rolw.exe file in few hours. Here are some of the options: Synchronize your Internet connection with your computer: Most broadband providers offer additional features such as wired network connection, voice over internet protocol (VOIP), and so on. You can use these to sync your internet connection with your computer in order to download your setupconsumerc2rolw.exe file. Remember that the connection will be always be on, and that you will have to enable it in order to use these internet

(time (test)) real 0m0.000s user 0m0.000s sys

0m0.001s Why is the function only performing at half the speed? A: 1+ 1 is 1+ same number as 1+ 1, and is a very simple operation in Common Lisp.

A: A more precise test - re-arranging your code a bit to be more C-like: (defun test () (let ((1 2)) (list 1 (lambda (i) (1+ i))))) The moral is that

German-language edition of .Q: Ajax Request in jQuery I have a modal with a table inside it. Inside the table I have a column that populates with information everytime the modal is refreshed. I have the modal working and populating with data using ajax: $.ajax({ type: "GET", url:
"image/getNewPics", success: function(data) {

`console.log(data); $('#modal #list').html(data); }`
`});` The data it retrieves is: `[{"id_str":"1"}]` I want the data populating the modal to be in the format: `1` But this is what it's returning: `1` How can I convert the data into the format I want? A:
Use `JSON.stringify`: `success: function(data) {` `console.log(data);`
