UMLS and Mutual Information {#sec008} ---------- We first extract phenotypic information of DrugBank and MeSH from UMLS Metathesaurus. In order to obtain the most comprehensive phenotype information, we extract phenotypic information for known drugs from DrugBank and MeSH using a unified logical framework (see Fig 2{ref-type="fig"}) and retrieve the missing information from UMLS. For example, there are no phenotypic information for DrugBank list "5-fluorouracil" in DrugBank, but it can be obtained from the MESH "5-fluorouracil." It should be noted that the coverage of DrugBank in UMLS is not perfect, but we believe that it can be improved by the incremental capture of UMLS. After retrieving the phenotypic information for known drugs, we input it into REVIGO \[[@pone.0130349.ref022]\] and analyze its semantic network to extract the phenotypic properties of MeSH terms. ![A unified logical framework for identifying the missing information of the drugs from DrugBank, UMLS, and MeSH.\ After collecting the phenotypic information, we 1cdb36666d

SimpleCast V3.1.0 Full Patch 4sharedQ: Is it a good idea to use a 3D camera on a window? I am just curious to know this, When is it a good idea to use a 3D camera on a window? If you can provide me with the design / idea about the same that would also be great. A: If you've got a lot of knowledge about windows and you are trying to build a plugin to detect objects on the window (like QR codes for example) then the best is to use eglTerminal, Qt or something else. But if you are just curious, a 3D Camera is a real camera that doesn't need an information about the distance of what you are taking picture of, so it could be a good idea. But if a face is in the window, a real camera will not be able to recognize it. EGLTerminal: Qt3D: A: I do not believe that you could use a 3D camera on a window without having a complicated solution for the perspective. Of course if you have a lot of 3D experience, you could use a real 3D camera to do a lot of interesting stuff. 1.
